The Conference on the Future of Europe comes at a crucial time for Europe and its people. The social and economic crisis exacerbated by the COVID19 pandemic, the climate crisis, challenges to democracy and EU claimed values demand proper and coordinated policies, increased transparency and stronger involvement of citizens and their representative associations.

The Conference should not only set an ambitious agenda, but also lead to decisions and be followed up by concrete actions.

We believe that the scope of the Conference should cover all relevant issues in order to address limitations in EU policies and seek effective and specific solutions to current and future challenges. This could include policies that create European economic, social and environmental cohesion, changes to the functioning of EU institutions as well as any Treaty changes needed to implement these policies. We also need to ensure that people’s contributions are in line with the EU values and competences, a clear agenda and an operational framework.

We come together as a strong and representative platform in order to be the civil society interlocutor for the EU institutions and voice civil society’s concerns into the Conference plenary. As European wide networks of civil society organisations representing citizens and people living on EU territory, we want, in coordination with our national members, to be closely involved in the Conference, but also in its agenda-setting, priorities, as well as in the follow up.

It is critical to establish a clear link between the Conference, its plenary and the citizens if we want to ensure a real civic engagement and not just a communication exercise which in the end will inevitably lead to increased distrust in EU and national institutions.
Civil society organisations are intermediaries between individuals and public institutions, as recognised by the Treaties (articles 10 and 11 TEU). They bring people together in a common cause, set collective goals for the common good and ensure participation and empowerment of all people, including the most vulnerable because of their status or condition. Civil society organisations are committed to ensure appropriate links between what is discussed and decided inside the institutional frameworks and people with their individual and collective expectations.

We believe that one of the crucial issues to be debated at the Conference is how to reconnect people with the European Union and its institutions. Fit for purpose legal instruments must be created in order to implement civil dialogue encompassing transversal issues affecting all citizens, ensuring that decision-making processes of all institutions and all stages are transparent, so that both EU institutions and Member States governments can be held accountable, moving from an intergovernmental approach, which is no longer fit to respond to current societal challenges to a culture of openness, and participation.

As the Civil Society Convention, we will meet regularly, drawing from feedback from our own members at national and local level, into the conference plenary. We shall nominate representatives to take part into the Conference plenary in order to give voice to the expectations of organised civil society. We shall also invite representatives from EU institutions to join our debates.

We will actively and proactively input into the different phases of the Conference Plenary and ensure that that discussions will lead to concrete proposals for action, decided in consultation with citizens and their representative associations. We also commit to scrutinise the way citizens’ demands are taken into account, and to monitor the implementation of the decisions made.

We stand ready to contribute to the regeneration of the European project in full compliance with the European Union’s values as defined in article 2 of the treaties and do our utmost to make the Conference on the Future of Europe a success.
LIST OF ORGANISATIONS:
The European coordination of Civil Society Organisations
The European coordination of Civil Society Organisations